

Relay for Life. May 1st 2011

This is my sorority's camp site; number 251
 $\Phi\Sigma\Sigma$

Though relay for life isn't one of our major philanthropies, many of our friends and family members have been affected by some type of cancer. Every year, Phi Sigma Sigma raises money to support cancer research.

This year for our Phi Sig booth, we made $\Phi\Sigma\Sigma$ cookies which people got to decorate and gave henna tattoos to people for small donations. Corree Pierce and Yesmin Tanguma are helping Mario pick out a frosting flavor.

Many prizes were raffled off throughout the camp in hope of raising as much money as possible. Here, Alma Gutierrez and Yesmin Tanguma are selling raffle tickets to win Maya Theatre packets and colorful blankets.

Athena Skapinakis takes golden boxing gloves and is using the punching bag to help beat cancer's butt.

There were all different kinds of stations and booths. This station consisted of Twilight cast impersonators. You were able to take pictures with the cast for a small donation.

There were also firemen walking around Leigh-ing people and taking pictures with people. The money the firefighters got for the Leigh's was donated to Relay for Life.

Many different people dressed as characters were walking around taking pictures with people. To the left, Angel Perez takes a picture with Chester the cheetah.

Other greek organizations fully support Relay for Life and have friendly competitions to see who raises the most money for the event. Here Kenny Casparis and Austin Brown show how much fun their having in the sun.

Jon Gist is having fun playing a bean bag game for a dollar. If he scores two or more bean bags, he gets a prize.

This year, they started a new tradition of making cars and getting donations for them. Whichever car got the most donations won. Almost every group participated and came up with creative ideas for cars that represented their groups.

All of the cars also got entered into a race. Whichever car crossed the finish line first won the race. It was funny watching people running with their cars and struggling to keep a hold of them.

Kristina Straw, a Phi Sigma Sigma alumna, represents Phi Sigma Sigma in the race. The car takes second place.

Kristina Straw and Alma Gutierrez proudly take a picture inside the car.

At night, people light luminarias in remembrance of people who have died from cancer or who have overcome it. Here Sasha Velasquez and Elizabeth Arellano light luminarias for their mothers. It is a very touching and at times heartbreaking moment.

The castle walls have a name written on every brick for people who fought cancer and survived. It was very touching to see in its entirety because there have been so many people from all different walks of life who have fought cancer and miraculously beaten it.
